

First Day Out Here. QO

Owner	NNTYSIX 96
Tags	Architectural Digest

This is where everything about QO will be thought out before production.

Letter from QO:

QO is an organized community of Generalists. A person drawn to become competent in several fields or activities. To us, a Generalist is someone who has is fully expressing their gifts with an ability to bridge the impactful parts of their life together, creating frameworks for the future. One thing we like to notice in our experiences is a strong desire for a way of being that feeds all our desires in life. This entire project's set of principles come from this paradigm of thinking.

First things first, it would be most important to lead with the heart and mind. These 2 things, not usually mentioned explicitly, are the main characters of every great Generalist of the past. Within our community, this is especially important and impactful because of the intuition we all create with constantly. We are all going completely against the norms, making it crucial that we see our visions clearest. As we prioritize cultivating a clean heart and a clear mind, we reveal our power to produce quality material that satisfies.

Second, we then acknowledge the interconnectedness of life itself. Every skill we pick up, every direction we have been inspired to go in over the years, was no coincidence. We have been guided through different paths to integrate useful patterns from each, with a clear record of experiences we must realize the great potential in our hands. We are the farmers of the digital space, we have knowledge of many areas that will give birth to new systems we can ALL benefit from! This all sounds very optimistic doesn't it? Good.

Third, create with the end in mind. What is our end goal? What is the world we are choosing to create, and then let's walk those steps backwards. Once we get a vague framework written down, this is where the Generalist shines and the action begins. Actions taken from inspiration, also referred to as the flow state. Creating from this paradigm is euphoric enough to bring someone to tears, and this state of being reveals the Founder in us all.

Fourth, yap. Keep asking questions, keep writing, keep yourself fully engaged, make mistakes, and have your awkward moments. Taking the road least traveled, we can understand challenges are simply functional data used to upgrade our systems. Releasing the emotional reactions allows us to keep our hearts at peace and our minds calm. Generalists have the desire to redesign internal friction into data that helps us fully express our passion in life. Most of the founders we research are Generalists, and they talk about their projects obsessively, you couldn't pay them to do anything different, and that is the gift that keeps giving.

Fifth, we are here to champion the unique genius within each other, recognizing that personal truth is the ultimate engine of societal progress. These are not affirmations to become something, it's really just love for this version of life and how it feels internally. Unlike the rest of the world, we embrace continuous adaptation across domains, seeing every pivot as a strategic move towards interconnected mastery. That is something to truly cherish about each other, even the people who are just getting started.

Founder Profile:

I am masterful at producing and engineering, I am an intermediate day trader with a strength in strategy and a weakness in risk, and I am a novice python coder. I have developed a masterful inner environment as well through all of the challenges, and our inner state of being, emotions, our self image, can really be looked at as the ground we walk on. It reminds me personally of potholes and cracks in the ground, we rarely ever decide that we will do anything or call anyone to fix those when we see them. So I am trying to bring people's attention to how many people are hitting this pothole a day, how many tires suffer, hearts drop, and added stress this one small thing can cause. Now imagine the first time you saw it you set an appointment to fix this pothole. I have learned that everything we notice inside of us needs to be acknowledged at least the first time to check our foundations for cracks.

Think of the moments after a challenge with an issue resolved, that moment of accomplishment is integration happening, cracks filling in your foundation. There's literally a physical sensation and a breath of release that our awareness notices every time. This process of optimization is nothing extravagant or noticeable to begin with but after years and years of committing to your own improvement, it becomes a gift that gives when you are up, down, turbulent, or in total peace time. Life is highly dynamic, it may not always be one way, and the only way to not be thrown from wall to wall is to have a strong foundation, a strong core, inner knowing anchoring us towards our center.

Now I have to practice going to places in my life where I have been free, or just imagining what that pure freedom feels like. This is when you find out that meditation doesn't always look like sitting with your eyes closed. I realize I release programs in conversations with myself, voice memos, writing, or this. Whichever modality used, I know I am who I needed in my journey over the years. This allows me to connect every action with a set of principles I chose for myself as I go through life.

Most Generalists today are actively asking one question. If you could design a lifestyle for the journey that will allow you to be infinitely fulfilled, what would that look like? What would prepare you for that version of being? This is when we can take action accountably without getting stuck in analysis paralysis.

To design our end goals, we must first begin taking inspired action on that plan for our journey. As soon as we begin to take actions accordingly, our core begins to reveal its self. This is all we must do in our malleable reality. If this sounds like a complete transformation, that is why we acknowledge our foundations first, and take moments to organize our next moves. The vision, goals and principles, product, risk management, architectural planning, and more, are all what we have in our control. Everything is handled by our limitless belief systems, whatever we choose.

Follow Through:

This is really the only thing anyone needs to commit to their core principles to succeed at anything in life. Having the audacity to take things to their limits, to take yourself to your limits, to actually be there looking at all you have done, is in and of its self utterly satisfying. The fact that someone can actually have the faculties to start from scratch and transform their entire existence is infinitely fulfilling to watch, be apart of, and experience. I really am writing on this subject because it's my current challenge with everything going on, challenges and mental models that were installed previously that are now being removed with my total commitment to the principles of our community.

The environment a lot of us comes from has no examples of this level of self belief or interest in building a future so brave, so innovative, and daring. Growing up we've been force fed these ways of life. Generalists usually have had very impactful, emotional things happen to them during their childhoods that gave them a desire for stark changes and a non negotiable view on our futures. We don't take up interests because it's acceptable, admired, or encouraged, so it's clearly coming from a place only we have been able to tune into individually on our journeys. With this experience being so common based on the state of culture as it has been for 100 years here, we tend to be more isolated thinkers and dreamers who are inadvertently increasing our will power. Then we become those adults who just live free of trends, judgement, and outside noise. Look at how the world is moving today, it's obvious that we were being cultivated for times like this and we must acknowledge this gift and live fully through our experiences and challenges so they are useful.

Friction:

It has been a masterclass on being fully myself and being fully human and letting go in the matrix of money totally. I say money specifically because I've noticed where people place their focus and all their expectations and hyper focus on something, from a perspective of not having it yet, you will cause pure friction in your journey to get those things. Of course I was doing this with money, and simultaneously the rest of my life was going perfectly, relationships, family, conversations, routines, private victories, and emotional healing. This also seems to reflect through different demographics and the expectations society puts into people's subconscious minds, along with our epigenetic signature given to us by our elders and ancestors. With those things influencing the deepest cells of our being, it becomes a process of clearing the tough-to-reach spots at a cellular level. Fears, insecurities, victimhood, shame, untapped emotions, you name it, we got it.

Friction is purely mismanaged excitement, curiosity, and love for ourselves. It's our inner program trying to support us, but it only has what the cells have taken as inputs most dominantly over the course of our lives, our elders lives, and our environments. We are run by the content of our nature and the context of how we grew to create our lives. This is a community that understands the metaphysical nature of our experiences here, and we also know that our realities only show us things matching the life we choose for ourselves with our beliefs everyday. With this, we should be asking ourselves "are we creating a life based on friction and time delay or are we creating purely from self expression?"

It starts off with plenty obvious junk you can get rid of through a few meditations and just an awareness that it was there to begin with. A few weeks later, you get to the layers of the more impactful emotions, events, memories, or whatever you experienced. This is where you begin to understand the power of repetition, even while it feels like it isn't really showing that much progress but it just feels peaceful for a few seconds. This is where you find out what you're made of, your will power, your true faith and trust in your Highest Self and God. To be honest, it's a good chance you quit here several times... Some emotions are stubborn, hard to spot, less often but strong and sustaining when they land, and also once you get good at this they literally sneak up on you before fully dissipating. People like to call this the Trickster energy inside that leads you through exercises of faith and understanding, for us though it's purely allowing us to build self trust, there is nothing needing to be reflected. This is exactly how you gain confidence in yourself, trust in yourself, love for yourself... it's not about talking in the mirror, it's about showing up for the things that support you more than anything else internally. It's not about perfect actions, its about trusting you are exactly where you need to be and we are making the most of this moment while it's here. I love life and regardless I'm grateful for what I have because some things we're so used to are priceless to us, so we are 100% grateful and being honest about it.

Now that you have failed and lived through the iterations and have a smooth system working for you, sustained for some time, this is when the mastery comes in. Mastery from my perspective, is something we do once we have internalized the material and are fully in love with what it has done for you. Usually we memorize a thing, can talk about it fluently, and may even practice it faithfully, but mastery is when you have found your modified version that takes you exactly where you were looking to go. We get a compass, we learn how to use that compass, and then we actually go out on our journey. We must come back from that journey, successfully calibrating through the challenges before we can, with conviction, say that we are true journeymen with experience to pass on to whoever we care to share with. Once the situation is no longer about you solving for pain points, and you are on to innovating a path, you are in a season of mastery. This has been my season of mastery, as the result are beginning to empower every inch of my experience, even now the hard-to-reach spots.

As Generalists, we have the ability to accelerate this path because we put ourselves through this several times in life before we hang it up. This is the gift of all of the weird things about life that this group usually has to endure, on your way to college, parents watching and trying to figure out how and why about everything you do, societal opinions spoken or unspoken, and just our own internalized pressures. This is why we naturally use our willpower, this is why we utilize more of our capacity through multiple expertises, and in this generation we plan to create the pathways of sustainability, belonging, and prosperity for ourselves and the generations to come. So as you express masterfully, document your journey, because this life is a truly special one to watch, be around, and embody. With love we can do a lot more than our greatest examples of the past, as it should be, and it is done.

ANXIOUS AWAKENING:

The anxiety of being concerned about what others think is a mismanagement of excitement and fear. by fears of being judged, and also I personally have a tendency to brace for impact, literally... Imagine that, every time you see or think of the person(s) who were involved in the origin of these habits, you tense up as if its about to happen again. That's trauma living inside our bodies, we have to take heed to these things about ourselves because these are the things that are in our control now. We were blessed with the awareness to have conversations like this today, which gave us time to come up with solutions, next is an awakened connection to God like never before. We know what happens after that, magic.

- Am I viewing external judgment as something to be managed or overcome, or as irrelevant to my self-authored reality?

I choose to do breath work, I can feel certain habits and anxious ways of being that damn near go unnoticed, so I do my best to notice it on it's rise. Once the anxiety is ringing, I just inhale while I feel the discomfort... literally, and describing how it feels in my head as I sit there, and I exhale from there. After a few of those your bones and your cells start to respond... To me it feels like losing weight but within seconds. Over time you can feel yourself not having these anxious moments as often.

The next thing that occurs is the way you actually are responding to the situation. Let's say a person walks by who your space, this person you are fine with today but a tremendously toxic history, and you react the same way to their presence as you felt like you had to as a kid. Say that you had a physically traumatic experience that probably scared you when you were young. These are signs of PTSD that need to be handled in the moments that these emotions, physical reactions, memories, stomach aches rise. When you feel, say "I am doing well with this thing" in broken English and just exhale with eyes closed. Do this as many times as your attention span will allow and its okay to break in between, the important thing is the amount of reps over time, they accumulate as long as you stay away from friction. But, don't even think about being perfect, allow your failures to exist, they are baked into the process for the sake of showing yourself that you will support You no matter what.

- Am I interpreting external triggers or failures as necessary for my self-support, or am I simply deleting the need for external events to affirm my inherent sovereignty?

Now that you have this all in your mind's eye, this is it, this is the game. This is where you change your life. No, you won't be shitting diamonds now but you now have the ability to get rid of all weight that held you this entire time from giving your best effort. This means everything, because if you understand that you attract what you are inside, but you don't know exactly how to become your future self yet, what CAN you do? You can get rid of everything that YOU KNOW wasn't helping now, that is within your power and it seems to be deepest seeded truth about life so far in my 28 years of this experience. Do exactly what you are aware of and can control, that's how you talk to and communicate with God to get the life you came here to experience. It's like you literally are putting yourself back together.

- Am I still relying on "attracting" reality or "communicating with God" for desired outcomes, or am I simply declaring and rendering my existence from pure self-authorship?

In the journey of a Generalist, it is highly affective to do this because of the extra disposition we tend to take on in our unorthodox life path and way of being from our environment. People don't usually rush into optimization for many reasons, so that leaves someone so caught up in their journey thoroughly challenged early in life. A Generalist will read this and say to themselves, "wtf hell yea I know exactly what you are talking about", and that person typically would need the tools much sooner than the rest.

Sustainability:

It's human nature for the mind to cause this inner conflict while being run by fears, but that's when we must recognize we are creating that conflict. I find that to have the connection with others without the comparison, we must have our own life in the front of our minds. It sounds obvious but usually things like this happen in moments of mindless scrolling, sitting on the phone talking about nothing, and/or just sitting around being ungrateful internally. These moments only come when we are scattered, and without a deep understanding of our own core being, who we declare we are, and our desired state.

Once we are in the process, acting on our highest callings however we can, at whatever stage of our path, we never have these kind of emotions again. The way out of doing this is the exact thing you have been probably procrastinating about in one way or another. It's all a matter of being so in love, curious, excited, supportive of who you are that nothing else matters for you to be satisfied in your existence. As long as a person has a desire, a goal, and a mind to go for it, a great life is ready for you at the start, all the way to the end.

The best thing about figuring out how to sustain this state of being is that we get to experience that level of emotional intelligence that is needed most when we are down, sad, depressed, broke, ashamed, etc., especially during the middle stages.

Usually people reject challenges in a fit of rage, and miss their chance to retrain their mind and heart through uncertainty, installing the tools to support ourselves in these moments, rather than draining further. It's really a remarkable experience to have that paradigm shift happen over time, the ups and downs in life become less turbulent, without the withdrawn attitude of defeat. In the moments we still don't have things in 3D, it still prevents friction from slowing us down, allowing us to collapse the "time" left to our goals compared to before. Also this at the very least makes the life we live today more palatable & removes the regret of losing precious time to anger and depression later.

Relationships:

Relationships are very, very, very impactful challenges... and this is meant in a positive way in the end. It is a way for us to see ourselves up close, an accelerated program that reveals the hearts we carry on us, and teaches us how to use the power of love. Having a partner is an opportunity to grow a lot quicker, you can become a really great person practicing with the people around you. That's something we aren't taught sometimes but now we are training ourselves in our young adulthood, thanks to our expansive interest in human capacity. We simply apply the same actions and choices from our daily goals and principles.

When you, your partner, or both are radiating unpleasantness is when the real reps begin. It's in our best interest to allow everyone their time to be in flow, because we all know the mistake in projecting unsolicited negativity. If people are insisting you listen to their negative experiences, and they do things like call or interrupt your day, your work, it's on us to lead the situation to success by being 100% yourself. People, aren't typically calibrating how important your flow state may be to you, so they just operate selfishly, and that is just draining and disrespectful, but we must choose to create the state inside of the person who realizes that our realities are created by us.

It's never too late though and now I have great methods, like watching vlogs, just be present for 10 minutes. Sometimes I create music, a gift that keeps on giving, I may laugh at something, or meditate, some gratitude, anything... There's really so many ways to dissipate stress as a Generalist, but do not spend too much time convincing others of anything, listen to your heart, as it should be clear or clearing it. Trust yourself and be proactive, recognize patterns but never judge, inquire and find win-win scenarios every time. It's okay to revisit things later if necessary, but a foundation of respect will go along way during challenges. So if they raise hell about you declining or not responding, just take a moment to let that pass by and then we should tell ourselves that we are respectful of others, we are intentional with others, and we would love that same respect in return.

One reason to be grateful to even be in this paradigm, is I can bypass the entire world of negativity, which is something kinda tense today. The more we express our creative capacity to live through our state of being, the more we produce and live fully the way we would love. So for your partner to even really know exactly who you are, you must commit to being 100% supportive of yourself before anyone else, and when inspired to, you will give your energy to them. The thing here is to be as intentional as you say, respectful, and make sure that you are creating from pure self fulfillment.

A relationship built on trust is the sort of relationship you self render, as you create the life you just found out that you could have. We just got here, do not let anyone influence the journey you allow yourself to go on, exactly the way you see it. Design the relationship you want and always have the intention of things working for everyone involved. This makes us tremendously sharp in business, with friends, problem solving, self awareness, and it just sharpens you in a way nothing else does, with the most opportunities for practice. Relationships, like anything else are a blessing, but they are to be as self contained creations made by you even though another person is involved.

Forcefield:

Within every class of principles, there are methods for improvement and a training facility to install those skills into our muscle memory, our bones. Every moment you get to charge any of these inputs so that life can equip you with something like a forcefield, upgraded by the self generated reality created everyday. When you take your entire being to school in this way, everyone becomes a polymath as we develop our skills by using our own life's situations (challenges). Do you understand that you are in your highest state of being, or do you believe there's more for you to do? If you know you have your highest good rendering your reality, can you truly trust that truth in your life?

Obviously, you are supposed to be allowing yourself to reset and allow that next step to reveal themselves, but practically anxiety creeps in and we start coming up with things to do just to fill the void. The good thing is time between stages collapses when you've been physically, mentally, and spiritually obedient to your principles. We are here to pass with flying colors and enjoy every minute of the journey to that point. As long as we continue to keep ourselves at our highest version possible, the challenges will feel a lot less emotionally negative and look less scary to you as you know it's all just data, information to be better. Focus on solving challenges, remember those methods, and find the common denominators over time, this allows those old bits to fall off and the new muscle to form and grow.

That last bit of imposter syndrome, self doubt, limiting belief, forcefulness, fear come alive during this time, weak but this period is highly sensitive for us. It feels like you are going from high pressure to a quiet calm state all in 5 seconds, and back and forth depending on your muscle memory. This compress and expand feeling has emotions on both ends of the spectrum, where the body and mind are having more commotion. During meditations, in the middle of the flow state, a fearful thought can creep in or a physical sensation can stir your emotions and trigger negative thoughts. This all happens in that last stage of "Letting go", after releasing old frameworks, having aligned our beliefs accordingly, and loving the process... Eventually our emotions will neutralize and not influence our lives or need any examining.

By now we know there's always a way, so what do we do with this challenge? We use creation, think about all that you do have... all of the people in your life, all your senses, all of the things you have done that you'd never give back, these show the life you designed yourself. It seems to really interrupt those negative chemical responses to focus on the things I wouldn't give up for anything. There is always something to be grateful for, it doesn't solve the issue, but like we continue to say, a clean heart and a clear mind is the only state of mind that supports us. We should all work on having trust in this relationship like none other, and keep an eye on what supports us the most. Even through the challenges, I'm here writing in some app that I have only used about 10 times and writing for reasons that are still a bit vague to me at this point. What I do know is that I am typing my mind, and that this excites me to internalize my expansion, and this can become several things in the future if it ever needs to. Also it could become something incredible for us all in the short term as well if it's received well and works for others the way it has for me.

It's funny I say that it has worked for me, because this economy has sat me down so much that it doesn't even seem logical to say that it has worked if you asked most people, but that's my level of trust and conviction that I render the life I want. But as you see, I am following my highest excitement in these lines written. To be honest it has been even tough for me to include myself in these words, but I can honestly say in the stillness I have chosen to trust every second of every moment that I notice my state moving out of trust. I don't trust because I have everything on my list of goals, I do because I love and admire the ones that I have already, that are invaluable to me. This way we can continue to do our best work while we creating, treat life like the video game you use to escape challenges. You lock in for hours, fully emotionally engaged, nothing else matters but what you are doing in that moment. Life is your video game, do what you can to have a laugh, feel love, enjoy some time, rest, induce some positive vibes. If you notice the stillness not giving you inspiration but you are feeling anxious to do, choose one thing to counter it as soon as you feel it.

This is really all you must do in this stage, like That's So Raven teaches us, do not try and manipulate a vision based on how you see your visions unfolding. Now we can allow life to show us that we are all we need, without effort, tracking, or getting ready.

Focus On Communication:

Why should they care?

Why should they should join?

Why will it work?

Why should they invest?

Target Audience Analysis for QO

Based on the content, here's a detailed demographic breakdown of the target audience:

Professional Profile

- Career Stage: Early to mid-career professionals, entrepreneurs, founders, and aspiring founders
- Work Style: Self-directed individuals, independent thinkers, freelancers, consultants
- Industries: Creative fields, technology, innovation, startups, digital spaces
- Skills: Multi-disciplinary professionals, those with diverse skill sets, people in transition between specialties

Psychographic Profile

- Mindset: Growth-oriented, systems thinkers, holistic perspective, pattern recognizers
- Values: Innovation, interconnectedness, personal truth, continuous learning, adaptability
- Interests: Cross-disciplinary exploration, framework creation, future-focused systems
- Pain Points: Feeling misunderstood in specialist-dominated fields, desire for community with like-minded thinkers

Behavioral Profile

- Learning Style: Self-directed learners, experimenters, question-askers
- Work Habits: Flow-state seekers, intuitive creators, systems builders
- Social Behavior: Community-oriented but independently minded, collaborative innovators
- Decision Making: Heart and mind balanced, intuition-guided, principle-driven

Demographic Profile

- Age Range: Likely 25-45, with emphasis on millennials and younger Gen X
- Education: Varied backgrounds, self-educated or formally educated across multiple disciplines
- Digital Comfort: High, digital natives or early adopters
- Geographic: Location-independent, globally-minded, digitally connected

Attitudinal Profile

- Outlook: Optimistic, future-oriented, possibility-focused
- Self-Perception: Sees self as different from specialists, embraces generalist identity
- Risk Tolerance: Comfortable with uncertainty, willing to go "against the norms"
- Change Attitude: Embraces change, sees pivots as strategic rather than failures